Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Sunday 24 Jan 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Showers, possibly wintry, followed by a clear, icy night.

Today:
Sunday morning will see rain and snow clear the east of the region. The rest of the day will see bright spells and showers, these locally heavy, particularly over Devon. Further snow is expected, especially over high ground. Ice likely. Maximum temperature 4 deg C (39 deg F).

Tonight:
Wintry showers fading during the evening leaving a largely dry and clear night, though some cloud and isolated showers lingering in the west. Frosty and icy, especially where snow accumulated. Minimum temperature -7 deg C (19 deg F).

Monday:
A largely dry day, with the odd shower possible in the west. Some high cloud moving in from the southwest, though most will see plenty of sunshine. Maximum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Outlook for Tuesday to Thursday:
Tuesday a band of cloud and rain moving northeastwards, with possible hill snow. Wednesday and Thursday cloudy with outbreaks of rain, heavy at times, and strong winds.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.